TRENTON, N. J., Mar. 30.—(INS)—With two astounding "confessions" to the Lindbergh murder revealed, and with one new suspect formally charged with the murder, Governor Hoffman today was prepared to go before the Court of Pardons to try to save Bruno Richard Hauptmann from the electric chair tomorrow night.

If he fails to win a commutation for the condemned slayer, the Governor, it was learned from an official source, will ask the court to set a new precedent by granting Hauptmann a "parole from death," possibly staying the execution for another six months.

Meantime, Paul H. Wendell, 48, disbarred Trenton attorney, was being held without bail in Mercer County Jail here on charges of murdering Baby Lindbergh on the night to April 1, 1932.

Wendell was locked up early Sunday morning after a secret arraignment before a justice of the peace. The murder charges were preferred on the basis of a 25-page "confession" which he has already repudiated.

Wendell charges he was "tortured by gangsters" until he made the confession.

Another "confession," it was reported today, has been made by Gaston B. Means, the former government agent who is now serving time in Leavenworth Prison for swindling Mrs. Evelyn Walsh McLean, of Washington, out of $104,000 in 1932, after convincing her he was in touch with the Lindbergh kidnapers.

Means, according to Hunterdon County prosecutor Anthony M. Haack, has told a "revolving story" of having murdered the Lindbergh baby in a "mine hole" near the former Lindbergh estate at the behest of a member of the Morrow family.

TRENTON, N. J., Mar. 30.—The Court of Pardons, was reduced from 8 to 7 members for the hearing of Bruno Richard Hauptmann's clemency appeal today, by the illness of Judge George Bushkirk, of Hackensack.

This was regarded as a possible "break" for Hauptmann. Governor Hoffman will now meet only 4 instead of 5 members of the court, concentrating on commutation or "parole" from death for Hauptmann.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 30.—Governor Harold Hoffman, of New Jersey, had another report from a government expert today, doubting the prosecution's contention that the controversial "rail 16" in the Lindbergh kidnapping ladder was made from a section of the flooring of Bruno Richard Hauptmann's attic.

While asserting he didn't want any publicity, Roy Kabenshur, a wood expert employed by the Department of the Interior, nevertheless, admitted he had found Governor Hoffman's report, substituting the theory of another Federal wood expert, Arch W. Lomey, employed by the WPA, that the wood for this rail did not come from the Hauptmann attic. Arthur J. Koehler, also a government wood expert, testified at the trial that the wood used for the rail was taken from the attic.

Conservation Corps To Make Replacements

The Civilian Conservation Corps Camps are making replacements between April 1st and 15th. Seventy young men from the relief rolls may be sent from Montgomery and Bucks counties. They must be unmarried and between the ages of 18 and 28 years. In addition, a few well developed boys of 17 will be included. There is at present no more room in the colored camps, and therefore, all the boys going in April must be white. Boys must all be from families who are getting assistance from the Emergency Relief Board, the Mothers Assistance Fund, or from large families with one working on W. P. A. but not making sufficient to take care of the whole family.

Boys are paid $30.00 per month while at Camp, $25.00 of which they allot to their families.

The work done by the Civilian Conservation Corps is of vast importance in preserving the 170,000,000 acres of National Forest Land throughout the country. It gives those who enroll under the CCC an unusual opportunity, and an unusual kind of job with good food, healthy living conditions and an opportunity for recreation and sports, as well as steady employment.

Boys in Bucks County who are interested, and whose families are getting relief, or are employed on W. P. A. jobs, can make application at any one of the following places: Bristol, 305 Wood street, daily, 8.30-5; Doylestown, Administrative Building, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, 9.00-12; Morrisville, Borough Hall, Friday, 10-12; Quakertown, Fire House, Tuesday, 8.30-1; Sellersville, Police Station, Monday, 10-12.

POLICE HOLD BOY, 9,
FOR FALSE FIRE ALARM*James Townsend, 580 Linden Street, Admits Pulling Box
at Beaver and Buckley*WANTED TO SEE ENGINES

A nine-year-old boy is being held by the police for sending in a false alarm of fire last night from Buckley and Beaver street. The lad, James Townsend, 580 Linden street, admits pulling the box which called firemen to the fourth ward. Townsend was in company of a group of boys at the time and the names of these boys have been obtained by Chief Hagerman.

Townsend will be given a hearing some time today and police plan to hold him for juvenile court. Bristol Consolidated Fire Department was called out four times yesterday. During the afternoon a field at Laing's Gardens was afire and the burning grass reached a point near the stables of Dr. E. J. Laing. The firemen were called and laid 250 feet of hose to battle the blaze and protect the buildings.

A grass field at Green Lane was afire and then at 7.30 another call was received from box 48, when a field was afire along Beaver street. It was about 8.30 last evening when the call from box 46 was received and the apparatus rushed to the scene only to find that it was a false alarm.

Firemen and police have decided to give the full extent of the law to those who send in false alarms or who set fire to fields. When a false alarm is received the firemen at the risk of their lives as well as the risk of the lives of others, rush to the scene, only to find that their services are not required. When fields are set afire the blaze spreads so rapidly that it is soon out of control and often causes serious fires.

Townsend says he wanted to see the fire engines go.

FIND BABY'S BODY IN CANAL AT YARDLEY*Corpse Was Wrapped in Oil-cloth When Discovered by Children*AUTOPSY IS PERFORMED

YARDLEY, Mar. 30.—The body of a new-born baby was discovered Saturday in the Pennsylvania Canal by children at play along the towpath. An autopsy performed by Dr. James V. Lawler, deputy coroner reveals that death was due to heart disease, injury to the neck and hemorrhage. It is believed that the child had been in the water about two weeks and that it was about two or three days old when death occurred.

The corpse was wrapped in a piece of oilcloth which was sighted and brought ashore by Robert Delaney, one of the children of the vicinity. The spot is about a half mile north of this place, between Lear's and Borden's locks. Bucks County Detective Russo is investigating along with Officer Thomas J. South.

ROB "BURGLAR-PROOF"
P. O. AT DOYLESTOWN*Thieves Get Into New Building and Take Cash and Stamps
Valued at $1,000*FORCED REAR WINDOW

DOYLESTOWN, Mar. 30.—Robbers yesterday forced their way into Doylestown's new $52,000 "burglar-proof" postoffice on South Main street, stole between $800 and $1,000 in cash and a quantity of stamps and made an attempt to force open a big steel vault in the rear of the building. A hole about an inch deep was drilled into the steel door of the vault, but the door would not yield.

The burglars climbed to the roof of a loading shed and after forcing a rear window climbed through to the carriers' recreation room and went downstairs. Three steel compartments beneath the stamp window were forced open, evidently with an iron bar, and the stamps and money scooped up. It is said that a large amount of money was in the vault at the time.

Harry Rush, a clerk, opened the front door at 5 p. m. to sort the mail when he discovered the robbery. He notified Postmaster Francis Fonash, who in turn notified State Police and the postal department in Philadelphia. George A. Lawrence, in charge of six postal inspectors, came here to investigate.

Authorities were unable to find any tools which the robbers used.

Pals Club Has A Party

The decorative scheme was in an attractive shade of green; and following games, refreshments were served.

MASTERS OR SUBJECTS

By Representative James W. Wadsworth of New York

When Mr. Roosevelt and his lieutenants came to Washington in the Spring of 1933, they brought with them the belief that our form of government, which has stood for one hundred and fifty years, is outworn and should be changed most radically. To be more specific, they believed that there should be centered at Washington power sufficient to regulate, down to the smallest details, all industry, agriculture, commerce, credit, investments, transportation, and, in fact, the very lives of our citizens as they attempt to earn their living. To accomplish such a transformation and to make it effective, they insisted that the Congress should turn over to the President the right to issue regulations which, automatically, would assume the force of law; in other words, to confer the law-making power upon the Executive.

In accordance with this program and at the behest of the President, the Congress passed a series of measures setting up a huge bureaucratic machine under the domination of the President and clothed with power to do all the things which the President insisted must be done. From the very beginning of this program it was apparent to every thoughtful person, and I include many Democrats in that category, that under our Constitution the President cannot become the law-maker; only the Congress may perform such a function, and, that being the case, the Congress has no right whatsoever to delegate its power to the Executive or any group of administrative officials.

Recurring deficits and a mounting national debt do not disturb these people one little bit. They are still intent upon their program of planned economy, which involves necessarily the centralization of immense power in the Washington bureaucracy. In spite of the decisions of the Supreme Court, the effort still goes on, which means, in turn, that the fight against this sort of thing must still go on. Boiled down to its fundamentals, the question presented is just this: Are the American people to remain the masters of their Government, or are they to become its subjects?

SOIL CONSERVATION
URGED ON STUDENTS
AT COMMENCEMENT*Two Speakers at Farm School Urge Graduates to Become Interested*COSTLY DESTRUCTION*Not All Farmers Are Seeking Special Privileges, Says Speaker

DOYLESTOWN, Mar. 30.—Addressing 31 members of the graduating class of the National Farm School at the 36th annual commencement exercises here yesterday before 1,000 persons, who packed Louchheim Auditorium, Pennsylvania Secretary of Agriculture J. Hansell French and Herbert D. Allman, of Philadelphia, president of the school, advised the new farmers to become interested immediately in soil conservation.

"The tragic and costly destruction of life and property from floods caused by natural forces can be curbed," Mr. Allman declared, "as the menace of erosion can be controlled by an efficient program of reforestation and soil building."

The president of the Farm School, in his plea to the graduates to become soil-conscious, continued: "Federal aid to agriculture when sound is praiseworthy, but the prevalent notion that all farmers are seeking special privileges is not true."

"Self-supporting farmers are opposed to regimentation, dictation and Government subsidies. Fully half the farms in this country are unimproved or run down, unsuited for modern agriculture, unable to compete with up-to-date farms owned and run by competent farm managers."

"Over-production on farms today is partly due to the economic situation. Many consumers lack the means to purchase sufficient food for a liberal diet."

Secretary of Agriculture French, speaking in place of Governor Earle, who sent his regrets at being unable to attend, said it was evident that agriculture was improving fast from the fact that every one of the Farm School graduates today has been placed in positions on farms in various sections of the United States.

Honor students announced by Dean Cletus L. Goodling are as follows:

Albert O. Boehner and Walter R. Schuck, Philadelphia; Israel H. Hendersky, Princeton, N. J.; Morris J. Goodman, Chicago; William F. Henry, Ardmore; L. William Klementz, Almont, Pa.; Harry F. Saxe, Scranton; Luther V. Shafer, Reading.

Prize awards were also announced by Dean Goodling as follows:

Student having best influence on student body, Albert O. Boehner, Philadelphia; most loyal student to principles and ideals of the school, Moses Shapera Memorial Prize, Albert O. Boehner, Philadelphia; excellence in scholarship, William F. Henry, Ardmore; Dr. Krauskopf Prize, Israel Meyer, New York City; student making greatest improvement, I. J. Silverman Prize, Morris J. Goodman, Chicago.

Back Hitler By Big
Vote On Rhineland CoupBy Pierre J. Huss
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

BERLIN, Mar. 30.—(INS)—Backed by an overwhelming "yes" vote of 98.79 per cent of the citizens who surged to polling places in his plebiscite on the Rhineland coup, Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler concentrated today on the "quarter-century of peace" proposals that he will present to the powers tomorrow.

He may again dramatize his international dealings by summoning the newly-elected Reichstag to hear his proffer simultaneously with its delivery in the capitals of the Locarno powers.

In the midst of the patriotic rejoicing that continued unabated throughout the Reich today, many foreign observers feared that the vast majority of 44,411,911 votes counted for Hitler over the 543,026 that were officially labeled "against or invalid" would lead to a stiffening of Germany's stand against the western allies.

SUES BRISTOL MAN
FOR $10,000 DAMAGES*Legal Action is Filed in County Court Against Harry
W. Phipps*INJURED BY AUTO

Claiming damages amounting to $10,000, Laura Bianchini, of Bristol, has filed an action in trespass in the Court of Common Pleas, at Doylestown, naming Harry W. Phipps, of Bristol, the defendant.

In a statement of claim, filed in the Prothonotary's office, the plaintiff alleges that September 16, 1935, Harry W. Phipps owned an automobile and was a resident of Bristol.

She further avers that she was walking along the Frankford and Bristol turnpike road when she was struck by the defendant's automobile about 200 feet west of the overhead bridge of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

The plaintiff, who was removed to the Harriman Hospital, suffered a cut on the head which required about four or five stitches and numerous other body bruises and lacerations. Because of her injuries sustained, the plaintiff was forced to lose five weeks' wages and continues to require medical attention, it is alleged.

Orders Autopsy On Body of Aged Farmer

MOUNT HOLLY, N. J., Mar. 30.—(INS)—Ellis H. Parker, grizzled dean of "Main Street" sleuths and chief of Burlington County detectives, today ordered an autopsy on the body of Gouldy E. Foulks, 74, who was found brutally bludgeoned to death on his 23-acre farm in nearby Pemberton Township.

Foulks, reputedly wealthy retired meat mopper shipper, was beaten about the face and head with a blunt instrument. His body was found slumped in a chair in the yard adjoining his home Sunday afternoon by Walter H. Scull, a clerk of Pemberton Township. As a light was still burning in the kitchen of the house, detectives believe the aged victim was attacked sometime between Saturday night and Sunday morning.

Relatives told authorities that Foulks, who recently had a $10,000 munition erected for himself, was in the habit of carrying large sums of money on his person, but detectives were not sure robbery was the motive for the crime as $21 was found in the pockets of the dead man.

Foulks, lived alone in his rambling farm property. On two previous occasions he was held up and robbed in his home.

Italian Troops Advance

Rome, March 30.—In the most detailed military communique issued in many weeks, the Italian government today announced two Italian troops have thrust south into Ethiopia, taking the Fascist army much further into the African kingdom, than they have ever been before. On the west and on the north front, the Italians occupied Debreh, and hoisted their flag only 60 miles from the British controlled Lake Tana. The central column on the northern front made a 30-mile advance from Fenarora to Sakota.

DETAIN BENSELEM MAN WHO SET FIELD AFIRE*Alfonse Buick Admits Deed
But Gives No Reason For Action*BUNGALOW DESTROYED

A man is under arrest here and will be taken to Doylestown today having admitted setting fire to a field which resulted in the total destruction of a bungalow and contents in Bensalem Township, yesterday morning.

The man is Alfonse Buick, 57, who for the past six years has lived alone in the bungalow section near Cornwells Heights, along the Mechanicsville road.

According to Bucks County Fire Marshal Stackhouse the Cornwells Fire Company was summoned yesterday morning at about 10.45 to a fire at a bungalow owned by Edward Platel, who makes his home in Philadelphia. The bungalow was totally destroyed with its contents causing a loss estimated at about $1200. Stackhouse learned that Buick set the field of Mrs. Hansell afire and that this fire started about 500 yards from the Platel bungalow spread rapidly and soon reached the bungalow. About 200 acres of grass were burned. Platel visited his place Saturday.

Buick admitted setting the field afire, according to the authorities.

At 12.30 yesterday morning the bungalow of Mrs. Anna Denham, Washington Crossing was destroyed with its contents. The loss is estimated at about $5,000. Mrs. Denham left last week for Washington, D. C.

The fire was discovered by Mr. Parks and Edward Canby, neighbors, and they sounded an alarm. The bungalow is located in what is known as the Wilkes tract. The front door of the place was found open and the fire apparently started in the living room. Firemen from Newtown, Washington Crossing and Yardley responded and pumped water from the river.

At 10.30 Saturday night a slight fire occurred at the barn of the Checker Inn, Lincoln Highway, Oxford Valley. Neighbors extinguished the blaze before the firemen from Langhorne arrived. The loss was slight.

Pasteur Film Gives Muni
His Tenth Screen Hit

Paul Muni, acknowledged to be the greatest portrayer of character roles on screen or stage, has been in motion pictures just seven years, during which he has created a new record. Every picture he has made has been a hit, each has been outstanding and his tenth film, the Cosmopolitan production "The Story of Louis Pasteur" which comes at the Grand Theatre tonight and Tuesday as a First National release, is declared to be his finest and most dramatic work to date.

Muni is starring in his tenth picture the first biographical drama of the screen "The Story of Louis Pasteur," which is based on the life of the famous French scientist.

CROYDON, KILLED IN
AUTOMOBILE CRASH*Pronounced Dead Upon Ar-

High School, Where He Was Instructor

CROYDON, March 30.—A popular young Croydonite, an instructor in the Wiconisco High School, met his death in an automobile accident at Reading last night.

The victim: Marvin Lee Collins, 22, Wyoming avenue, Croydon.

Young Collins is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Collins, and had passed the week-end at his home here. It was on the return journey to Wiconisco that the fatal accident occurred near Reading.

The deceased was pronounced dead upon admittance to St. Joseph's Hospital, Reading.

The late Croydonite is survived by his parents; and a sister, Mrs. Edgar Ritter, also of this township.

Collins graduated from Bristol high school in 1931. He had played on the varsity football team for four years; was president of his class for three years, and of the Bristol high school student body for two years. He was also a member of the high school orchestra, playing the violin. He entered the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, graduating from that institution last June. On October 2nd, 1935, he accepted the post of physical director at the Wiconisco high school.

Young Collins was a member of Wilkeson Memorial M. E. Church, and also of the Sunday School. He had spent his entire lifetime here.

The body will be brought to the Collins home here, the funeral service being held there on Thursday at two o'clock. The Rev. Howard W. Ouraier, pastor of Cornwells Heights M. E. Church, will officiate. Burial in Bristol Cemetery will be in charge of the H. S. Rue Estate, funeral directors.

State troopers today were investigating the death of Collins, whose body was found beside the highway near Baumstown, five miles east of Reading.

John Guenther, of Reading, reported to police that he was driving from Philadelphia to Reading, when he suddenly noticed an automobile parked in the middle of the highway. Before he could stop, his car crashed into the rear of the parked car, which was owned by Collins. After the accident, Guenther said he found Collins' body lying in a ditch beside the road. Police believe that either Guenther's car or some other vehicle struck Collins as he was repairing a flat tire.

Guenther and an aunt, Mrs. William Parker were slightly injured, but his mother was not injured.

THE "LISTENER" HAS HIS DAY

It has been said time and again that there is no critic more "difficult" than one who pays nothing. This is true of radio with one qualification.

In a sense the radio listener pays nothing for the costly programs he hears and is so free to criticize. Indirectly it is his money which operates the broadcasting stations and provides the talent that goes before the mike.

The whole radio structure is built upon the investment of owners of radio receiving sets. No single listener's investment is large, but when the average cost of single sets is multiplied by millions, and to this is added the annual cost of operation and upkeep, the aggregate cost, to the listeners, of radio programs reaches vast proportions.

Therefore the readiness of the listener to criticize the radio fare is not to be condemned on the ground that he has no financial interest in the matter. Just as well condemn criticism by the people of plays, books, merchandise and candidates. That of the receiving set owner is the one financial interest most fundamentally essential to the entire radio business, and the promoters of that business will not cease to give most careful attention to what he has to say about programs.

Should people stop buying radio sets and accessories and "silent" nights become a general thing in the homes, high-powered salesmanship would not avail the broadcasters in selling the "time" for which the demand is still great. Popularity is the greatest asset of the radio business.

REHABILITATION

Work of reconstruction after widespread floods in the East unparalleled since the coming of the white man is a huge task that will require many months for completion. For many it will, of course, never be completed. Many homeowners and small business men will find their lives blighted because they lost all they had.

Such is the tragedy of all floods and excesses of Nature in whatever form. If man could foresee such holocausts and accurately predict their extent, loss of life and property could be minimized, but Nature is fickle and human beings are her victims.

Rehabilitation of the stricken areas is being energetically prosecuted by all governmental and other relief agencies, but at best they can only alleviate distress. They can not restore life nor recreate possessions destroyed by the ravages of swollen waters.

Economists and other magicians aside, the way to emerge from a depression is to keep on keeping on.

An elevator strike would be the spot to ask the tenant on the 46th floor what he thinks of New York's skyline.

call of the voters of Bucks county, a meeting convened at Schenck's Hall,

Bridge-water, on September 21st, 1874,

to devise means to make the bridge over the Neshaminy at that place free.

On motion of George Nebeker, John

G. Vandegrift, Esq., of Bensalem, was appointed chairman, and I. S. Flint, of Bristol township, secretary. Remarks were then made by Mr. Nebeker, as to the call of the meeting, the great disadvantage resulting to the lower end of our county from the excessive toll charges by the Turnpike Company both to tax-payers and all voters, and on his motion the Chair appointed the following committee to express the sense of the meeting: Geo. Nebeker, Samuel H. Harrison,

George W. Sipler, William Cryer,

Wm. Rowlett. The committee retired for consultation, when remarks were made by Dr. C. R. King, C. S. Vandegrift and others. . . .

The new Presbyterian Church at Carversville was dedicated on Satur-

BRISTOL WATER WORKS—Work

was begun on the lot purchased by the Company from Jesse B. Mears, last

Monday morning; the ground was staked out, the location of the stand pipe and well selected, and on Tuesday morning, men were engaged in making the necessary excavations. John McNill & Son, of Burlington, are to furnish the pipe for the street mains. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company supply the stone and cement. The Directors have purchased two Worthington pumps capable of pumping 1,200,000 gallons every 24 hours. The cost of the works will not exceed $35,000, and it is now announced may possibly be constructed at a much lower figure.

WARMINSTER—Farmers pass through Warminster daily with large loads of apples on their way to Andrew Vanboskirk's press at Hatboro', where they receive only ten cents per bushel for them.

As Mr. Edwin Lacey has disposed of all his buildings in Ivyland, he now intends building a large a commodious Temperance Hall, and boarding house, to be built of frame, four stories high, with mansard roof, and situated on one of the main streets.

A correspondent writing from this place to the Intelligencer giving some particulars of the business and improvements of Bristol says that the two factories in the town are now in full operation. The felt factory of Charles W. and Joshua Peirce gives employment to about 200 hands, besides a large number of outside workers. The goods made include such articles as carpets, druggists, table-covers and ladies' skirts, which find a market in all parts of the country. . . . It (the firm) also established the iron foundry now owned by Thomas B. Harkins, which is doing a steady business together with a soap factory, coal yard, etc. The stocking factory of Thomas Hughes & Company gives employment to between 200 and 300 hands, and is kept running night and day. Many of the operatives are girls. . . . Many of the houses recently erected in Bristol have been of small size, being designed for the use of working people, but the tide is now changing and several handsome buildings to cost from $3000 to $12,000 are now under way. The congregation of Baptists is now preparing to build a parsonage in connection with the church. The changes in the town during the last fifteen or twenty years have been very marked.

The Court of Quarter Sessions was occupied during the entire week in disposing of the criminal business on the docket. The Grand Jury considered 83 bills, 58 of which they found true. They visited the public buildings, and reported them in good order and well kept. They decided that the erection of a new jail, which has been so persistently urged by the Doylestown papers, is unnecessary.

The first annual reunion of the Warminister public schools, accompanied by the Hartsville and Horsham schools, will take place at Beaumont's Park, on Thursday, October 1st. The exercises promise to be very interesting, and will consist of vocal and instrumental music, addresses, etc.

HULMEVILLE

"Lessons from Our Breadbox" was the topic presented by the leader of the Epworth League devotional meeting, Miss Nellie E. Main, in the Methodist Church last evening. Several members aided in presentation of the topic, these including the Misses Irma Miller and Letty Everitt; and Harold Benner. Scripture was read by Miss Betty Everitt; a vocal solo given by Miss Grace H. Hlick; and a saxophone solo by Miss Betty Lou Lathrop. The pianist was Miss Elizabeth Foster.

The week-end was spent in Seaside Heights, N. J., by Mr. and Mrs. Earl Phipps, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Vornhold, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Afflerbach, Jr.

The Rev. T. William Smith officiated at the funeral service for Dr. Karl P. Plaucin, late of Treviso, at the funeral home of Charles Haefner, yesterday afternoon. A large number of relatives and friends gathered to pay their last respects, and floral tokens were numerous. Burial was made in Beechwood Cemetery.

Attendance at the covered dish supper of the Ladies' Bible Class, Nesham-iny M. E. Church, held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. George Hibbs, Bristol Township, Saturday evening, totalled 34. A social time followed the menu.

CHAPTER XXXV

After the first tears others came easily and she made no effort to stop them—light warm tears that carried in solution her dissolved hopes, her pride and her self-reliance. The brightness and vivacity that had been Juliet Rankin melted and escaped in little gulping sounds.

She hid her face in her arms on top of the desk and sobbed gently like a tired child.

O'Hara, standing over, like most men, simply could not stand to see a woman weep, and he would have done anything to stop her. The only thing he knew to do was to put his arms around her, an awkward proceeding, but he managed it, and bending over whispered those meaningless endearments that are always so inadequate until a woman has her cry out.

Half lifting her he persuaded her to get up from the desk and go home. When she was on her feet she was still in his arms, her wet face pressed against the warm lapel of his coat.

The staunch solidity of his body was a blessed consolation to Juliet. His arms around her were strong. There was no passion in his embrace, just a sweet enveloping tenderness that crept into her body and soothed every exhausted nerve. Thus she clung to him and in her tired helplessness O'Hara felt, oddly enough, an inexplicable tremor of melancholy, when the joy of victory should have been singing in his heart.

"I don't think," said Juliet mournfully, "I'll ever come back to my office again."

But O'Hara patted her on the back and produced one of his old grins.

"Certainly you'll come back and wind up your affairs in ship-shape style," he said encouragingly. "A defeat isn't a rout, and you haven't an ounce of panic in your whole system. As a matter of fact, your ideas are still worth big money. Gottlieb flopped—not you. When the tide went against him, he quit cold. You're quitting the Institute, but the reason's different."

How susceptible is the human heart to words of approval! Juliet before she knew it was smiling again and her head was a little higher.

"You're quitting this joint," said O'Hara firmly, "because you've found something better to do with your life."

The manager of Juliet's apartment house, hovering in the tapestry and gilded lobby, saw her come in through the revolving door in mid-afternoon, a marked departure from her established custom. Behind her came O'Hara, with the possessive look of a man in love on his serious face.

The manager, from long experience with tenants, was adept in reading expressions, and he knew that Juliet had not, as yet, found happiness. After her storm of tears Juliet looked as though she had, indeed, been through a great deal.

He came across the lobby and joined them apologetically as they waited for the elevator.

"Oh, Miss Rankin—about the disturbance last night. I hope you won't think badly of us for investigating. So sorry—"

"Not at all," said Juliet in a low voice.

It mattered to her scarcely at all what the manager or any one else thought. Not for much longer would she be a guest under this exclusive and expensive roof. Within less than twenty-four hours her splendid career had blown up as though dynamite had been set off beneath it.

Over again would be the old nerve-racking search for the right opportunity.

Either that, or the gamble of a new life as mate of the somberly attractive man who held her arm so firmly going up in the elevator. O'Hara had lost any pretense of gaiety, he hung on to Juliet grimly as though she might at the last elude him. Only when he had her safely in the apartment did his tension relax.

"Now, I want you to quit worrying about anything," he said with commanding energy. "We'll straighten everything up at the Institute and leave it clean. By the end of the week, at least, we'll both be gone."

Juliet made him no answer. She was too fatigued emotionally to attempt solving anything with words. Ever since she had entered the Institute she had slowly been discharging her strength. The pace had been terrific—not the business responsibility alone, but the vitality expended in daily contact with O'Hara and Von Guerdon. When she visioned a great commercial success she had released a prodigal escapement of nerve-force. She had held back nothing as a recuperative reserve—she was as spent as a beaten runner at the end of a hard race.

"Come here," said O'Hara, and it was easier to obey him than to resist.

He picked her up—her weight was nothing in his arms—and carried her to a deep chair. Sitting down, he held her in his lap, leaned back against the cushion and cradled her restfully. Her face was flushed and warm and there were tiny black smears on her lower lids. His large strong hand stroked her hair, soothing her.

"Don't you worry about anything, honey," he said consolingly. "You made a swell fight and it wasn't your fault it flopped. You're not a hard, cold business woman—you're just a little girl. I'm going to turn over a new leaf. We'll make a paradise out of just being alive!"

Juliet, tired yet comforted, lost herself in long silent reflection. It was extremely difficult to decide with the mind a matter that only the heart, really, could determine.

"You promise me paradise," she speculated aloud. "I wonder if you can deliver. It's such a lot to expect, isn't it?"

The former throbbing and seething in her blood, when she was near O'Hara, had ceased to disturb her. His resemblance to the man she had once loved no longer had the potency to make her tremble and melt and yearn.

O'Hara was a virile man in his own right. His personality was definite and unique. He was not a ghost.

"I can't resist making promises," said O'Hara warmly, "because I know they'll come true."

But there were too many considerations in conflict to give him a definite answer. Without being wildly in love with him, it was possible for Juliet to imagine, nevertheless, a steady devotion between them. There would be that task, so dear to a woman, of building his character, of bringing out his best, the proud thrill of converting lovable weakness into enduring strength.

The fact that he had, in his loneliness, gone around with a flimsy little thing like Katie Schmidt showed how pitifully he needed even the paltry feminine influence that Katie had to give. Such association was not the measure of his taste—merely the index of his forlorn state.

Reasoned thus, the balance was all in his favor. Yet there was another side to the ledger. Marriage meant, definitely, the renunciation of her own career—the devotion of her whole life to his. Perhaps O'Hara would prove one of those incurable failures.

One had to seem a little mercenary to get at the truth. What if he spent all his savings and then, through helplessness, carried her down to the mediocre level of life from which she had struggled so long and so violently to escape? Juliet tried to make an honest and emotionless reckoning. Better now than later. Heretofore there had been all too little of common sense in her life.

These ingredients she weighed as though love—marriage—needed scales.

Then, all at once, there was a third person in the room. Katie Schmidt's voice was heard before Juliet or O'Hara saw her small figure.

"Well—this is a surprise!" Her words crackled with sarcasm. She was wrapped in a slovenly kimono and wore nothing else, except slippers.

O'Hara stared at her in a kind of absent-minded surprise as though he were coming out of a dream, and was not pleased with what he beheld.

"Hello, Katie," he said coldly. "Be quiet, will you, please."

Katie came around in front of them and planted herself with determination. "So I'm to be quiet, am I?" she asked dangerously.

Juliet heard this impertinence, but it didn't matter; she only wished it would stop and Katie would leave the room.

"Will you please leave us alone," O'Hara said imperatively. "Can't you see—"

"Of course I can see!" She uttered a short, jeering laugh. "I can see you making love to her. A beautiful sight—oh, beautiful!"

"It's none of your business," said O'Hara angrily. "Get out!"

"He tells me to get out!" cried Katie derisively. "Ain't that swell!"

At this, Juliet roused herself out of O'Hara's embrace and stood up, two spots of color burning in her cheeks. "Please go," she said, forceful and dignified. "I'll talk to you later."

Katie lowered her head and faced Juliet truculently. "I'm not takin' any orders from you," she retorted boldly. "After him all the time, wasn't you? Giving me good advice about acting ladylike! And then stealing my fellow on the sly. If you think I'm goin' to stand for that you're crazy."

"Will you shut your silly mouth?" cried O'Hara, menacingly. But Katie whirled to face him like a cat about to spring.

"Why don't you go on and hit me," she queried, lifting her voice with a yell. "Don't you wish I'd shut my silly mouth! You had your fun with me and now you're falling for her. Cheap! Low! After all I've done for you—what do I get out of it? Well, I'll tell you something, you made love to me and you can't walk out now."

Juliet caught her breath, while O'Hara went quickly red about the cheeks and forehead. A mirthless, feline grin stamped itself mockingly on Katie's pale face.

"It's a lie!" cried O'Hara, incredulous and apprehensive.

"You can't get away with it, big boy!" shouted Katie. "A girl has got her rights. Oh, I don't blame Miss Juliet so much. He's got a way with him."

Juliet slowly turned to O'Hara. He tried to meet her eyes, but failed. "Is this true?" she asked in a low voice.

He made an effort to speak, and then tried again. "I don't know."

"Certainly it's true!" cried Katie vigorously. "And what's more, I'm still crazy about him. He's the only man I ever loved and he knows it. I won't cause any trouble if he'll do the right thing. . . ."

Juliet's heart, so far as she knew, had stopped beating entirely. It was exactly as though she were completely hollow inside.

"I agree with you, Katie," she said tonelessly. "He ought to do the right thing. He ought to take you on a trip to China, at least. . . ." She walked across the room to the door, opened it and went down the softly-carpeted corridor. The elevator took her to the gilded and marbled lobby. Without looking to the right or left, she marched past the manager's desk and went through the revolving door.

Life is not simple. It cannot be solved merely by passing through a revolving door.

Outdoors on the sidewalk Juliet was no further from unhappiness than she had been upstairs in that unseemly room with O'Hara and Katie Schmidt. Her nerves jangled horribly.

"It's all over," she told herself silently. "Finished. Wound up. Caved in. Why was the ending so ugly? Maybe I'm under an evil cloud—I don't know. Why should I be punished and blighted because I took up Katie and tried to help her? Some kind of a blast hits everything I touch. Gottlieb staked his faith and his money on my proposition and it blew up. I tried my best. One wreck follows another."

O'Hara, Katie Schmidt, Madame Hubert—all headed for smash. How can I ever believe in myself again?" O'Hara, as a lover, didn't matter. His weakness she could forgive. It was a blinding illumination of a trashy streak he shared with Katie that wiped him out.

She walked to the edge of the curb and stood there, as though expecting a car to come by and pick her up. A dozen went past but no one noticed her.

"What does the world care?" Juliet thought. "I could die tonight without a whit of difference."

The only one who cared was Von Guerdon. But she had let him down, too. She had been obsessed with ambition for a business triumph—had rated success more important than the love Von Guerdon offered. She had felt merely a perfunctory sympathy for his disappointment—had turned the kindly from his staunchness to mawkish sentimentality over O'Hara. With unfailing accuracy, it appeared, she had taken the wrong turn wherever possible.

Thus O'Hara, following, found Juliet on the curb, undecided, purposeless, her face white except for the patches of feverish red in her cheeks. It was almost a trance-state, a cessation of any forward thinking whatever. She was unconscious of place, or of her smart appearance in her dark blue, trimly-cut ensemble.

"I can't let you wander like this, Juliet," he said desperately. "I'm not thinking about myself. It's you—you're on the verge of a breakdown. That girl upstairs is getting out now, but I'll look after her."

Baseball, Football, Basketball, Boxing, Bowling and Other Sporting Events Are Featured Daily For The Local Follower and Lover of Sport

EIGHT BRISTOL BOYS TO BE IN BOUTS TONIGHT

Eight Bristol boys are scheduled to appear in bouts on the amateur boxing show card to be conducted tonight by the St. Ann's Athletic Association in the Italian Mutual Aid Hall, Wood street and Lincoln avenue. The bouts, ten in all, are sanctioned by the Middle Atlantic District of the Amateur Athletic Union.

The localities are: Sammy Baiocchi, Vince Della, Phil Quici, Jole Zettler, Dumpty Nocito, Tony Puccio, Tony Maglione and Al Paris. There is a possibility that William Leighton, of the Rescue Squad, will also be used.

Match-maker Patsy Moffo was forced to change the card a little yesterday when it became known that Jule Zettler is ill and will not be able to appear. He was scheduled to fight Frankie Falcone. To fill in this bout, Moffo will match Dumpty Nocito with George Lyons, Kensington.

Sammy Baiocchi will have as his opponent, Salvatore Manzo, Mason. Mason has scored victories over two St. Ann's fighters, recently—Lenny Dever and Dumpty Nocito; and Baiocchi will seek revenge for the Purple and Gold organization.

Two return matches are listed. Tony Maglione will meet Al Hall, Kensington, and that slugfest between Ralph Romano, Mason, and Francis McClay, Kensington, will be held. The officials had a hard time picking the winner of this bout the last meeting and another close battle is expected.

Phil Quici and Joe Zettler will make their debut to the local fans. Quici will take on Joe McCaffery, Kensington, and Zettler meets Willie Baines, Mason. Al Paris will have as his foe, Harry Graber, of the East Side Club.

For his comeback opponent, Tony Puccio has Ralph Mazzone, runner-up in the A. A. U. tournament. Vince Della is planning to knock out Al Gallagher of the Kensington team.

The first bout goes on at 8.30 o'clock sharp.

DINNER SERVED

The members of the Moose basketball team were entertained with a spaghetti dinner Thursday evening at the home of Nevin McKinley, 236 Otter street. The Moose team, members of the Bristol Amateur League, were champions of the season.

DONOFRIO TO BOX HALL GOODWIN, CROYDON

CROYDON, Mar. 30.—Charlie Daggart, matchmaker of the Croydon Arena, has closed the most important match in the Philadelphia district for his fight program to be held Wednesday night. The much sought after bout is between Frank Donofrio, champion of the Middle Atlantic states 175 lb. class, who fights under the Seymour Club banner and Hall Goodwin, colored light heavyweight, champion of the Philadelphia district and Golden Gloves champ, a member of Sigma Theta and the chap who knocked out Harry Davis, the St. Ann's colored ace, in a recent tournament.

This bout will be one of a triple-wind-up card that Daggart feels will be the best ever promoted in this section. The other two wind-ups will bring the slashing Jack Carter and Joe Daddah together in an effort to settle a grudge that has developed between these two 160 pounders. Two weeks ago Carter won the decision over Daddah in the most sensational bout seen here.

When Daddah realized that he had lost he rushed Carter in the dressing room and the handlers had difficulty in keeping the boys from finishing their grudge right there. The third part of the wind-up will see clever little Jimmy Tygh meet Jimmy Pitts, 126 Lehigh Valley champion, and a member of the Sigma Theta. The seven other bouts will be announced later in these columns.

YARDLEY

Extensive plans are being made by the Yardley W. C. T. U. for a Mothers' and Daughters' luncheon to be held on Easter Monday at the home of Mrs. William C. Beener, Afton avenue. The members of the Youth's Temperance Council will also be guests at the affair. Mrs. Samuel Linton, Penn's Park, has been spending a few days at the home of William R. Yardley, Sr. Mr. Yardley, who has been spending the winter in Florida, will leave for home within a week.

Joan Belleville, Mary Belleville and Joan Swan, Yardley, are members of the Trenton class which will dance at the Children's Concert Association recital on the roof garden of the Stacy-Trent Hotel, Thursday afternoon, April 1.

2nd, at 4 o'clock. The recital is under the direction of Miss Jeanette Havestrick, of Trenton, who has a class of 40.

A number of friends honored Elizabeth Caffey in honor of her 13th birthday anniversary. The affair was held at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wilmer Caffey, College avenue, and the guests included: Dorothy Zimmerman, Lucille McKenna, Dorothy Harle, Marguerite Marion, Dora Brindley, Jean Monroe, Virena Bennett, Mildred Elizabeth Dilliplane, Elizabeth Caffey, Miss Eleanor Caffey and Mr. and Mrs. Caffey.

ENTERPRISE, Ore. — (INS) —

Mountain sheep now can definitely be added to the list of wild-life residing within Oregon's boundaries. Forest officials who recently climbed to Ice Lake, in the Wallowa mountains, reported they counted ten mountain sheep during their trip. They said there probably are about fifty of the animals in the state.

Miss Catharine Wildman, Langhorne Teacher, Dies

LANGHORNE, Mar. 30.—A prominent Langhorne woman, Miss Catharine Wildman, assistant principal of Langhorne-Middletown high school, died Saturday following an operation in Jefferson Hospital, Philadelphia.

The deceased, known to many Bucks Countians, and highly respected and revered, had been removed to the hospital a few days previous to her death, having been taken ill during the course of her duties at the high school. She was a teacher of history and French in Langhorne high school for the past 20 years.

The late Miss Wildman resided with her sisters, the Misses Esther L. and Elma C. Wildman, at 305 North Pine street. Another sister, Miss Anna Wildman, Philadelphia, survives. She was the daughter of the late Ellwood and Mary Ann Wildman.

Hundreds of students have come under the tutelage of Miss Wildman, who took a deep interest in her profession, and all young men and young women who came into her class-rooms.

The funeral will be tomorrow afternoon at 2.30 from her home, with services of the Society of Friends. Interment will be in Langhorne Friends' Burying Ground.
